ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

Superintending School Committee,

FOR THE YEAR ENDING MARCH, 1885.

REPORT.

Fellow-Citizens of New Ipswich:

I have attended to the duties belonging to this office with some solicitude and a great deal of interest. I am very grateful for the respectful co-operation of the officers and teachers of the schools. The scholars also deserve commendation for respectful deportment toward one whose official presence is often not greatly coveted.

Again we have had a year of unbroken harmony in the schools—no panic, no contagion, no quarrels, and but little grumbling. I keep an ear open for all these jarring sounds, but usually manage to let them die out between the tympanum and the vocal cords. Perhaps we could all cultivate profitably something of this ability to absorb rumors instead of scattering them again.

I am persuaded that the teachers as a body have given excellent satisfaction, and that they deserve the respect and commendation so often bestowed.

I think as a body they deserve great praise at our hands for moral character, for respect shown to themselves, and for undivided attention to business while teaching. The changes have been rather more than last year; indeed, I never expect to see that record excelled, if equalled.

We have maintained twelve schools—one more than last year—because No. 9 has been under our care; No. 6 has had no school. Sixteen different teachers have done the work; and one of these changes was strictly on account of sickness. Thus we have given a permanence to our schools that is often lacking in country towns—a real basis for progress.

I have no suggestions to make the town of very great importance, I fear, much as I have sought for them. Being very conservative by nature, and made much more so by experience, I have no pet recipe for good schools. Not at all indifferent to modern discussion or favorite theories of reformers, I do yet mistrust them. They must fight their way and hold the ground by honorable contest. So much of modern progress is on paper and in their talk that one must be distrustful or be a victim too often. Wonderful machines are in vogue, but still people have to work for a living, or cheat; wonderful medicines are concocted, but still people ache and limp; wonderful systems of education are framed, but still there are uneducated youth growing to be adults, and this not alone among the hills of New Hampshire, but wherever laziness, selfishness and greed of gain abound. Who knows any patent way of banishing ignorance? No good thinker can fail to see that in this country education is a secondary matter in the minds of the people. It is lauded, it is sought, it is even bought with a great price, but in most cases not for itself, but to serve another end—and that “to get a living.” Knowledge for its own sake as a rich possession is not the object of the present age. It is an age of materialism; it is a contest of wealth against worth, and this is the real trouble with all schools in our land. That is called practical and valuable which will win in the financial strife, and all the rest ornamental or antiquated. The real trouble is that the children get no adequate sense of the value of education at home, and how will they ever seek it as hidden treasure? Social standing, high position and lucrative employment they know enough about, but how little of the value of real mental cultivation for itself! Some dim idea they may have that scholarship may lead to preferment, but where is the school that exalts scholarship for its own sake!

A desire for learning and an appreciation of the same must be inborn or acquired from environment; and this desire is the very first requisite of a good scholar, and the legitimate preparation for a good school. The parents, then, have more responsibility by far than the teacher, and on them depends the future of the schools of our land. Give me pupils eager for knowledge, and I will give you a good school any time.

But I need not generalize longer. The reasoning that I have hinted at accounts for my high estimate of country schools. I would for choice put my child in one of them till at least fifteen years of age instead of one of the best appointed schools in Boston.

The great panacea for all ills that town schools are heir to is the abandonment of the district system. It has once been urged on your attention, I think, and I am not indifferent to it. Some ends could be reached doubtless that seem desirable, but perfection might still abide further on.

The great problem that presses on us untiringly is that of the depleted districts. None of us wish to be unjust. Proud are we that in our town there is no feud; no sectional or party strife, no wish to triumph one over another. Still no fair minded person can fail to see that we are wasting money sadly in the outlying districts, though we want to work for the interest of the greatest number.

To spend so much money on so few pupils seems a waste. Think of seven districts with less than forty pupils all told, and less than thirty to attend school.

The appropriation of the town for schools is liberal indeed, and we may well be proud of it; and we are all anxious that these few should have their share, but is there not some better way of spending it? Cannot some plan be devised to husband our resources and amass our forces? There is some good way out of every difficulty; what shall be the way out of this? The finder will deserve a chromo.

Brief mention of each school may be made as follows:

DISTRICT NO. I.

Prudential Committee: Mrs. Mary H. Thayer.

Teachers: Helen E. Hood and Genevieve Webber.

This excellent class of scholars have had excellent instruction all the year. Of Miss Hood's success the first two terms I need not speak. It was equal to that of other like efforts. So far as mental training is concerned her system is simply admirable. It cannot fail. It recognizes the principle of development; of progress by building, and not by racing.

The pupil thinks, he reasons, and so he advances, and cannot help it. Now this advance upon one's self is the pith and kernel of education. When will people learn that intellect is to be trained and not crammed in order to educate?

The last term was also one of quiet industry and very profitable. To be mistress of this school as it now is must be a pleasure to any teacher. I am very happy to say that the young men here honored themselves and added greatly to the interest of the school.

DISTRICT NO. II.

Prudential Committee: Oliver Tenney.

Teachers: M. Lizzie Hadley and E. Louise Wood.

These pupils had their old teacher again. They had learned her quiet, efficient ways, and went at once to their work. Those who came regularly and to learn got on very nicely, and the school was a good one.

Miss Wood had been successful elsewhere, and proved an excellent worker here. Diligently using the time, she gave the scholars a good drill, especially the younger ones, with whom drilling is a preparation for thinking. This school is now again in session and doing admirably, with a new teacher, because Miss Wood could not be obtained.

DISTRICT NO. III.

Prudential Committee: Seth L. Wheeler.

Teacher: Juliette Adams.

After a year's vacation this school again opened. The teacher seemed quite at home with this little flock of little lambs. They seemed quite happy and industrious, though their perches were high for so short limbs, but I believe no accidents happened in mounting. Sickness, which at one time threatened to be contagious, closed the first term prematurely. So much was added to the last term, and it seemed still better than the first—it was a good school.

DISTRICT NO. IV.

Prudential Committee: Fred M. Chapman.

Teacher: Anna J. Balch.

Here we were fortunate in getting a teacher for all the year, one who knew the pupils and could go to work at once. She had the good will of the pupils at once and kept it. Her instruction was clear and her labor untiring, full of energy and decision. I think all parties will remember the school with pleasure.

DISTRICT NO. V.

Prudential Committee: Augustus C. Wheeler.

Teacher: Evelina Davis.

The good fortune of this district is rarely excelled—the same teacher above two years, and one of the best. I need not repeat the story of last year. Admirable tact and unstinted labor characterize the instructor of this school. Time will not efface the impression she has made on their minds; may she long live and labor. I cannot fail to compliment the large boys on their manly deportment.

DISTRICT NO. VI.

No session during the year.

DISTRICT NO. VII.

Prudential Committee: J. Otis Wheeler.

Teachers: Mrs. Annie E. Farwell and Miss Caroline A. White.

Mrs. Farwell's services would have been gladly retained had it been possible. She labored untiringly, and no one could find fault. Good discipline was maintained, and the pupils had every opportunity to learn; some of them made excellent progress. The winter term was not as harmonious, but deserves to be called a good school. The teacher was familiar with the studies and managed the classes with ease. But this school in winter is not easy to manage, and wholesome discipline is not relished often by one deserving it. Possibly the wisest means were not used in every case, for who is always wise to forecast the event? But such means were used as ought to have succeeded. And they did succeed with most of the pupils. Those who came had good instruction, and the teacher speaks of decided improvement on the part of the large scholars as to deportment.

DISTRICT NO. VIII.

Prudential Committee: Simon H. Rolf.

Teacher: Eunice Hodkin.

Here a teacher was employed new to us, but with some experience elsewhere. She was conscientious and faithful. The terms in the district are short, and the pupils can but be backward unless taught at home. Harmony prevailed in the school, and the teacher sought constantly the welfare of the scholars. They made fair progress.

DISTRICT NO. IX.

Prudential Committee: Mrs. Emma L. Wood.

Teacher: Lillian E. Burnap.

The only reason I could have for not praising this school is that it is not ours. If we had as good a one I would be proud of it. But the teacher and every pupil lives just over the town line. They had enough to make a row, and they were all smart. The parents took great interest in the school and were justly proud of it, and so was I; but I am not to waste my precious encomiums on other town's schools. But I will say they had a capital teacher.

DISTRICT NO. X.

Prudential Committee: Leslie J. Carr.

Teachers: Myrtle M. Marsh and Anna Annett.

There were here some excellent scholars and parents anxious for their children to learn, but the funds were limited, and the room is only attractive to an antiquarian, so it was not easy to get the teacher deserved. The one who came wished to do well, but lacked experience and perhaps years for this kind of school. The labor of a teacher demands heroism. Diligence in business and fervency in spirit are every day needed. Indeed, no good quality comes amiss in one who hopes to mold the minds of these restless and shrewd observers. Many good qualities were exhibited and some progress made. The pupils that came in from other districts were a great addition in numbers and interest. The other teacher had had experience and made good use of it. The scholars were orderly, and, so far as I had a chance to observe, were studious and attentive, making good progress.

DISTRICT NO. XI.

Prudential Committee: Chas. B. Preston.

Teachers: L. Ann Heywood and Bert C. Preston.

Good work was done by the old teacher for two terms. At the opening of the third her state of health forbade further service. The pupils parted with her with great regret, and it was difficult to tell whether scholars or teacher were most bereaved. Both had deserved great credit. The new teacher was one very recently of their own number. They showed their good will and the good sense of their parents by welcoming him to their desk cordially. That same good feeling has continued and still abounds. The school is still in session and doing good work. We score one more for home manufactures. Our children can get superior instruction without leaving New Ipswich.

DISTRICT NO. XII.

Prudential Committee: John S. Taylor.

Teachers: Genevieve Webber and Helen E. Hood.

The first teacher would have completed two years' service here, I suppose, had she not been invited to work so much nearer home. I need not speak more of her success. The district likes her, the pupils love her, and she gave herself heartily to their service. The other teacher readily adapted herself to this peculiar school, and so finished a year of successful service for the town, making some six I think in all. No eulogy is needed from me—the people speak for themselves; if such had not been given already it would come most heartily.

DISTRICT NO. XIII.

Prudential Committee: Jos. E. T. Marsh, Jr.

Teacher: Carrie B. Wilson.

If goods find a ready sale to the same dealers and users, there is little need of describing them—they speak for themselves. Miss Wilson has completed two years here. I venture that they seem short to her. Industry and patient devotion characterize her labor. The school is growing less in numbers, but has still some fine pupils, and they have used the time well and have progress to show for it. They will never cease to love their teacher.

These teachers as a body deserve my sincere gratitude, which I tender them on behalf of the town. They have taught moral responsibility, and made themselves examples worthy of imitation. Let them take courage. It does not hurt us to have a little fault found with us. Some have had this done for them. But I know too much about the matter to be very severe in criticism—I see much more to praise.

The number of pupils in town between 5 and 15 years of age reported by the board of selectmen is 200. The table following will show other statistics.

It will be remembered also that the roll of honor makes no note of sickness or forced absence. Some others deserve just as much praise, but could not be truthfully included.

W. R. THOMPSON,
Supt. of Schools in New Ipswich.
